The Case of Johnny Gosch

Johnny Gosch was a 12-year-old boy who lived in West Des Moines, Iowa. On September 5, 1964, he was delivering newspapers when he disappeared. His parents immediately reported him missing, but the police were unable to find any trace of him.

The Gosch family never gave up hope that Johnny would be found. They hired private investigators and searched for him themselves. In 1989, they received a letter that claimed Johnny was alive and being held captive by a satanic cult.

The letter led the Gosch family to Paul Bonacci, a convicted child molester who had been involved in the Franklin child sex abuse scandal. Bonacci claimed that Johnny had been kidnapped by a satanic cult and that he had been forced to participate in satanic rituals.

The Gosch family's claims were met with skepticism by the police and the media. However, in 2013, a book was published that provided new evidence to support their claims.
